

A step-by-step look at abortions in Indiana

Before their 45th birthday, three in every ten women will have had an abortion. Most women seeking abortions are in their 20s and are already mothers.

While the 1992 Supreme Court case Planned Parenthood v. Casey reaffirmed a woman’s right to receive an abortion, it also gave states more rights to regulate a woman’s ability to access one.

Since the ruling went into effect, abortions in Indiana have declined by 23 percent. In 2011, 61 percent of Hoosier women lived in a county without a clinic authorized to perform abortions.

Indiana passed HRXXX in 201X, which put nine new restrictions on a woman’s access to abortion. This interactive will introduce you to three characters stories and take you through the process of pursuing an abortion in Indiana.

Emma

Emma is a 27-year-old college graduate who just moved back home to Fort Wayne. Her parents’ insurance no longer covers her and she decided she’s healthy enough to not need insurance quite yet. She uses public transportation to get to both of her part-time jobs where she could get fired for taking too much time off. She thinks one of these jobs may turn into a full-time career and is hoping to get benefits then.

Leah

Leah is a 17-year-old who just received a scholarship from a state university. She is still living with her parents in Columbus as she wraps up her senior year. Both of her parents work for the county and have told Leah she’ll have to pay for college herself. Leah started saving for books by delivering pizzas in her parents’ car after school. Her parents have public insurance and she is still covered by thier policy.

Counseling

You make your appointment at the clinic and the first step required by the state of Indiana is the provider counseling you against going through with the procedure. Below is a video of what they might tell you in a typical counseling session.

That’s a lot to take in. Scroll to continue your counseling visit. Remember you can swipe left to walk away now.

Ultrasound

Indiana requires women seeking an abortion to receive an ultrasound during their counseling session and listen to their fetus’s heartbeat. Click the speaker below to experience this.

Waiting...

Between your counseling appointment and your procedure, Indiana requires an 18-hour waiting period. This can be complicated by the fact that many clinics keep odd hours on only certain days of the week. To represent those 18 hours, please wait nine seconds before moving to the next step.

Procedure

You arrive at the clinic to receive your abortion and are surprised to learn you have to be escorted from your car to the building. Protesters are gathered outside of the clinic with graphic photos and catchy slogans scrawled on poster board.

Inside

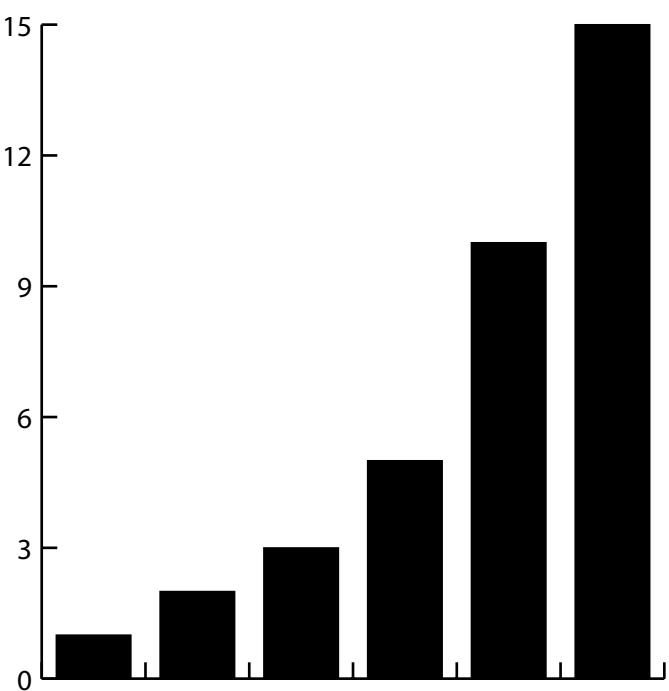

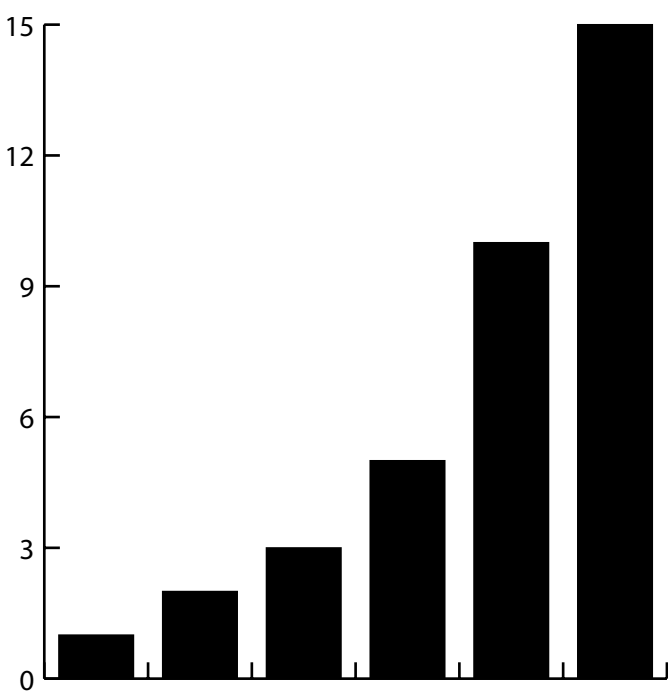

You make it into the clinic, fill out your paper work and are taken into an exam room. The doctor double checks that you want to receive your abortion and upon your confirmation hands you a pill. You take the pill and the doctor hands you another to be taken at home later.

After the abortion

Your operation was successful. Most are. Less than one percent of abortions have a complication arise and they are considered 1/10th as dangerous as childbirth.

Of course, you spent a week wearing a sanitary pad to work, bleeding more than you normally would even on your period, but you figure that's a small price to pay.
